VACATIONS AT HOME

Few people realize the advantage of a vacation at home. To the majority of persons a vacation means a few weeks' rest from work, heated argument among the members of the family as to where to go, a sudden decision, a hurried packing and departure; a few weeks of so-called pleasure and the return home, hot, tired and lazy.

To the too few wise persons who choose to remain at home a vacation means an entirely different thing. It is a few weeks' rest from work, preceded by the anticipation of rest and quiet, a sojourn devoted to reading, walking, visiting or any other enjoyable pastime and a return to work, refreshed and with renewed ambition.

The vacationist who stays at home can think of many delightful things to take up his time. Some even bring the joys of camping into their yards and with the aid of a tent and an imagination, have an unusual vacation. These persons get to know their town and country community much better, a fact that will help them in their future work. They are often much cooler than if busy trying to have a good time at some summer resort.

A novel idea of a vacation at home was tried by one man. Feeling that he could not leave his work for several weeks during the year, he took his vacation in installments of one-half day at a time. For two weeks he takes the mornings off and for two more weeks he has the afternoons to play in. He gets much real pleasure and rest out of such a vacation and returns to work with a feeling that he has had a real vacation.

These vacations at home are good for the business man or woman, for the child or for the student. They are not for the tired housewife. She needs a rest from the home. Usually she cannot get this unless she leaves town and gets away from the atmosphere of cooking, sewing and housecleaning.

The ouija board manufacturers don't need to advertise; the spirits keep things moving.

A THIRD PARTY

It has seemed necessary a few times in the country's history to form new political organizations, but the cases have been rare. Ordinarily such movements are the result of personal motives of a few would-be leaders who cannot dominate the organization in which they hold membership. This does not mean that there must be absolute agreement among all members, for there must be discontent, disagreement and agitation that politics may progress. However, there is little excuse for a bolt in any party now and those discontented will render a far greater service to the country to continue their membership in their party while they struggle to elevate the organization and increase its efficiency.

No one can belong to a party. This restricts political freedom. There are many who feel they cannot even take membership in a political party but insist on absolute freedom of political thought. This is commendable. But a bolt from a party, followed by the establishment of a new party, can only be justified by extreme circumstances. No one may ever expect to be satisfied if he has a sense of progress with the conditions existing in his party, but by this, with proper action on his part, he has the opportunity of performing a real service.

It is to the interest of America that we have few parties. European countries are afflicted with too many parties to that those in power become mere puppets in trying to form a coalition of a large number of organizations in order to remain influential. By this their usefulness is sorely crippled.

Rather should there be a move to lessen the number of political parties to the point where there will be rational competition. Two organizations with about equal strength seems to be the ideal. With this arrangement it is quite sure competent men will continually be chosen for office. It is the characteristic of childishness to foster a grudge by establishing a losing cause as a third party must needs be now.

THE NEW BOOKS

"Wyndham's Pal."

Harold Bindloss' story, "Wyndham's Pal," is of adventure and intrigue in the dark lagoons of the Caribbean. Harry Wyndham, a young Englishman, faces the task of restoring the fallen fortunes of his ancestral trading firm. He is inspired by the love of a girl, and only through success in his enterprise can he win her. This ambition coupled with the love of adventure leads him the longest way round but finally brings him back home. (Frederick A. Stokes, New York, cloth, pages 316.)

"The Great Accident."

The story of "The Great Accident" which is laid in Hardiston, Ohio, is so truly and sincerely written by its author, Ben Ames Williams, that it seems probable that it might have happened in any typically American town.

By a queer turn of events, Winthrop Chase, a young fellow of no extraordinary qualities, even a bit wild and irresponsible but decent and honest, is thrust into a position of political power. The town in which he lives is nominally dry and to the amazement and fury of the local politicians Chase proceeds to enforce the dry law. Naturally the politicians try to break him.

(MacMillan Company, New York, $2.00, cloth 405 pages.)

"The Clanking of Chains."

"The Clanking of Chains" is Brinsley McNamara's attempt to interpret in a novel Sinn Fein and its reaction on Ireland. In the character of Mich-

and Dempsey, the author has given us a young Irishman who realises perfectly the background of his country in its true essentials. The author's conclusion is astounding as the power of subtle analysis with which it is enforced. (Brentano's, New York, cloth 262 pages.)

"The Opium Monopoly."

Ellen N. La Motte has written "The Opium Monopoly" in which she has hoped to show the real evil maintained under British administration in the Far East. The evil is the opium traffic. The purpose of the book is to cleanse the world of the poison and an empire of stain. The basis is the official "Blue Book." (MacMillan Company, New York, $1.00, cloth 84 pages.)

"The Lord's Prayer."

Fannie Cassidy Duncan in "The Message of the Lord's Prayer" has contributed an inspirational literary gem to recent literature. The lessons of the great petition are admirably stated. (The Judson Press; 85 pages; $0.75.)

"Marks of the World Christian."

Daniel Johnson Fleming in "Marks of a World Christian" presents an analysis of "the mind which Christians should bring to bear upon the world," which comes with an unusually fresh and vigorous appeal in these days when we hear much of world citizenship and need to realize that we must be world Christians if Christians at all.

BIBLE COLLEGE OF MISSOURI

SUMMER TERM 1920

2. 8w. The Bible as Literature. The Lyric, Prophetic and Apocalyptic materials of the Bible. Specially the Literature of the New Testament. The study seeks a knowledge of the nature of the contents, the literary structure, and an appreciation of the beauty, variety, and power of the Holy Scriptures as works of literary art. Prerequisite for the course, sophomore standing. (2). Hours to be arranged, probably 7, T.W.Th.F.

3. 113w. The Social Teachings of Jesus. An inductive study of the teachings of Jesus in their bearing upon social questions with a direct application to the great social problems of our time. Anything the Man of Nazareth said is received with deference and the timeless character of his teaching finds a new significance in application to the problems of a social age. This course must be preceded by Sociology 1f-1w (See University Catalogue) (2) Hours to be arranged, probably 7, T.W.Th.F.

5. 122w. Christian Ethics. The ethical significance of the life, purpose, and religious consciousness of Jesus, in comparison with other ethical ideals, and with special reference to the moral problems of our modern world. (2) Prerequisite, Junior standing. Hours to be arranged, probably 9, T.W.Th.F.
